MAKING VENETIAN GLASS.
Very Little of It Really Manufactured in Venice.
There are doubtless few persons who have failed to admire at some time or another the beautiful Venetian glass. The exquisite coloring, elegance of form and surprising delicacy of some of the work turned out by Italian craftsmen make all lovers of the beautiful covet the specimens of Venetian glassware displayed in the big shops and stores.
A peculiar fact concerning Venetian glass is that very little of it is really manufactured in Venice itself. It is at Murano, a small island and town little more than a mile north of "The Queen of the Adriatic," where the Italian glass industry chiefly flourishes. Here, many centuries ago, the old Venetian glass workers established themselves and produced that work for which connoisseurs are so willing to pay a high price nowadays. The secrets of the work are jealously guarded—so much so in fact, that it was not until about 50 years ago that the methods were discovered which enabled Antonio Salviati to revive the Venetian glass manufacture, which fell very much into decay between the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.
Prior to 1890 neither Murano nor Venice for very many years made much glass in glass. Indeed, at the present time Murano is the value of $2,000,000 are annually made in Venice. Thanks to Salviati, however, Murano has for nearly half a century past been making on a large scale glass objects whose quaint forms and rich colorings are but little if at all inferior to the best products of the ancient glasshouses.
Near the famous Big Wheel in the Italian exhibition at Earl's Court, in London, a Venetian furnace has been set up, around which half a dozen skilled Italian glassblowers work, turning out before the eyes of spectators that exquisite ware which excites so much admiration. Glass of every description and color is produced here daily—vases, candelabra, table sets, in addition to imitations of ancient Assyrian, Egyptian, Greek and Roman glasses. The great point about the blown glasswork as made by the Murano craftsmen is that each individual piece is an original work of human art. Each man is an artist who revels in the creation of new shapes, there being no limit to his fanciful ingenuity. And as it is almost impossible that any two pieces of work should be alike unless the form is very simple, indeed, the buyer can choose according to fancy and at the same time be sure that no one else possesses a piece of exactly the same size and shape.
Adjoining the Venetian glassblowers room is a showroom, and here can be seen the work in all its varieties, from tiny plain vases, costing but a few pennies, to rich colored goblets and mirrors, valued at a far greater number of dollars. They may not have so interesting a history attached to them as that which makes the work of the ancient Venetian glassblowers so valuable in the eyes of collectors, but they are none the less beautiful.
Always Keep Faith.
Many a woman who would not think of lightly breaking a promise made to a grown-up person is utterly careless about keeping her word with her children. She promises whatever is convenient at the moment and apparently thinks that the breaking or keeping of these promises is a matter in which she can please herself and that her children have no right to consider themselves aggrieved if she does not do so.
A mother who acts thus does her child grievous harm. She forgets that the sense of justice is strong in quite a little child and that it is natural and reasonable that he should expect his parents to be as good as their word and to fulfill their promises even at the cost of convenience. Promises should not be lightly broken and the parent who is guilty of this soon loses his children's confidence, which is one of the sweetest things which our little ones can give us.
When boys and girls learn to doubt their parents' truthfulness they soon look around for some one else whom they can trust and on that person they shower their affection and bestow their confidence—Woman's Life.
"Now children," asked the good-looking young Sunday school teacher, "can any of you tell me the name of the man who lost all his power when his hair was cut?"
"His name was Samson," answered a boy in the front row.
"Good And can you tell us why Samson was?"
"Yes'm. He was the champion piano player."

THEORIES ABOUT THE SUN.
No Immediate Danger That it Will Burn Itself Out.
The current theories concerning the sun and the planets are that the sun was once vastly hotter than it is now and that for a long period it has been slowly but steadily cooling. This doctrine is built on the notion that the sun is a mass of fire in progress of intense and fierce combustion, and that, like any other fire, unless its fuel is replenished, it must burn out and become extinguished. Some astronomers teach that the sun is supplied with fuel by vast quantities of comets and meteors that are shoveled into it by some process of nature, but other astronomers, like Sir Robert Ball, reject the possibility of any such systematic supply of fuel, and they believe that the sun as it burns shrinks in size at the rate of 23 feet of its diameter in a year. As the mass of the sun is something like 880,000 miles in diameter, it is calculated still to last for a good long time, but there is something extremely melancholy and saddening in the idea that our grand luminary will one day burn out with a spasmodic gleam and whiff of ill-smelling smoke like the snuff of a candle.
It is with great satisfaction that we are allowed to believe in the possibility that the sun is made of radium and that it can continue to give heat and light for an inconceivable lapse of ages without being in the least diminishing either in size or capacity to warm and illuminate us. The idea that it is not losing 230 feet in its diameter yearly is particularly consoling.

There is another suggestion which would enable our solar system to continue its operations without either suffering an instantaneous conflagration or being consumed by slow combustion, and this is that the sun and the various bodies which revolve around it constitute an electric dynamo. An incandescent lamp on such a scale as could be resigned and created by combined omniscience and omnipotence, to go on in its beneficent course forever. Such a notion meets only the contempt of science, which insists upon the existence of actual fire in the sun, that sooner or later must burn itself out to complete extinguishment. Until, however, astronomers like Prof. Langley shall make a flying machine without balloon attachment that will enable human beings to fly, their vagaries concerning the playing out of the sun may well be neglected by all except full-fledged scientists.—New Orleans Picayune.

All Have Their Toys.
There isn't a place in the world where the children have no toys. Even in Australia, among the degenerate and animal-like bushmen, the children have toy fire sticks which they rub to produce flame. In the Polynesian Islands the baby savages have toy blow guns.
Eskimo land is a perfect Santa Claus land of ivory and bone toys, many of which are made to move, so that the little Eskimos have dogs impressed to sleds and little seals and whales and canoes which are so carved that the tiny man in them oobs back and forth as if he were paddling and will even throw a harpoon.
But all savage children try to copy new things. Now, in the very heart of Africa, travelers find the little negroes playing with pieces of wood that they have carved into imitation of the rifles that they have seen the white men carry. They even stick a piece of cotton in the muzzle to imitate the smoke.

Deep Sea Temperatures.
The deep floors of the ocean everywhere are covered with a layer of comparative cold water. In the Atlantic, Indian and Pacific the temperature of this bottom water varies from about 33 to 37 degrees Fahrenheit. In the Polar seas it is below the freezing point—the bottom temperature of the Antarctic being about 31 degrees Fahrenheit, and in the Norwegian Sea from 26.2 to 29.5 degrees Fahrenheit.
During the last Swedish Antarctic expedition, Dr. G. Anderson recorded a bottom temperature between South Shetland and Graham's Land as low as 23 degrees Fahrenheit.
Bransfield Strait, explored by him, repeats the typical hydrographical condition of all ice-bearing parts of the ocean—a superficial layer and a deep water mass, both characterized by low temperature, and between them a body of relatively warm water. But this section shows two remarkable features; the intermediate warm current is here fairly developed, and in consequence a very large part of the section is occupied by the bottom water, the temperature of which is only 29.5 to 29 degrees Fahrenheit. The latter figure is but three-tenths of a degree Fahrenheit above the point of equilibrium between sea water and ice.
In Jewish marriages the women is set on the right, but throughout Christendom her place is the ceremony is on the left.

Suffering
Will Not Help Your Disease, but Will Weaken Your Nerves.
